SIGNIFICANT SPEECH.

General Secretary of German Manufacturers Utters

WORDS OF WARNING.

Says Tariff Relations With United States Are Not Satisfactory and Ayers Uncle Sam Takes Unfair Advantage.

Berlin, June 21.—At a meeting of the Central Association of German Manufacturers, embracing most of the great manufacturing organizations of the country, held at Nuremberg, General Secretary Herr Bueck, referring to trade arrangements with the United States, said the association supported temporary extension of treaty duties to the United States because the German industry at this moment was not sufficiently prepared for a tariff war with the United States. Continuation of the situation created by the temporary arrangement, however, he said, would be irreconcilable with the economic interests or dignity of the German empire. The general secretary felt it necessary, therefore, to warn the German industry to prepare in time for a tariff which would be unavoidable if the United States thinks it can continue treating goods unfairly.

WOMEN ARRESTED.

Suffragists Are Charged With Having Disturbed the Peace.

London, June 21.—Misses Billington and Kenney and three leaders of the Militant Women's Suffragist association were arrested at Cavendish Square Thursday for creating a disturbance outside the house of Chancellor of Exchequer Asquith while seeking a hearing. The women were arraigned in police court. Miss Billington was fined $50, or two months' imprisonment, whereupon she expressed her intention of becoming a martyr and going to jail. Hearing of other cases was adjourned.

Countess of Carlisle, herself an ardent suffragist, referred to the affair at Thursday's meeting of the Women's Liberal Federation. She said she was shocked when passing through Cavendish Square to see "so-called women suffragists fighting the police and making an impudent mockery of womanhood."

The countess repudiated any connection with the "poor misguided" women who attempted to mob the chancellor of the exchequer in his own house.

WILL CELEBRATE.

Isthmian Canal Commission Will Have an Old-Fashioned Fourth.

Washington, June 21.—The Isthmian canal commission on the canal zone will have a regular old-fashioned Fourth of July celebration in Panama. Special excursions will be run to Panama from all points along the canal route for the accommodation of persons desiring to attend the exercises. Money has been raised by popular subscription among canal employees on the isthmus and in Washington for fireworks. Governor Magoon and other prominent men on the isthmus will make addresses and lend their assistance in making the day a memorable one.

GREAT DEMONSTRATION.

"New State Celebration" Was Held With Immense Enthusiasm.

Oklahoma City, June 21.—A "new celebration" was held here Thursday and proved the greatest demonstration of public sentiment ever manifested in Oklahoma. Excursion trains arrived and were heavily loaded with enthusiastic people, among them almost every prominent man of the new state. Governor Hoch of Kansas delivered the principal address in the park, where the exercises were held.

POPULAR PREMIER.

Hundreds of People Followed Seddon's Remains to Cemetery on Foot.

Wellington, N. Z., June 21.—The funeral of Premier Seddon, who died suddenly June 10 on the steamer Owyhee Grange, took place here Thursday, and was a striking demonstration of public grief. An enormous number of people followed the hearse on foot to the grave through the streets, which were packed with spectators from all parts of the colony. The day was observed as a general one of mourning throughout New Zealand.

SCHOONER SINKS.

Collided With Dutch Vessel and Captain's Son Only Survivor.

Dover, Eng., The Danish schooner Bertha sunk near South Goodwin Lightship as the result of a collision with the Dutch tank steamer American, from Antwerp for New York. Eight of the schooner's crew were drowned. Peter Nordholm, the captain's son, was the only survivor. The American proceeded, not having sustained any damage.

FOUR MEN ARE DEAD.

Terrible Sequel of Attempt to Escape by Convicts

AT A LOUISIANA MILL.

Singleton, Sent Up For Life, Secures Foreman's Revolver, and Precipitates a Fight That Has Tragic Termination.

Natchez, Miss., June 21.—Four dead and one dangerously, perhaps fatally, wounded, all white men, is the result of an attempt by three life-term convicts to escape from the Angola, La., state convict farm, seventy miles down the river from this city, Wednesday morning. The dead:

Captain J. W. Block, foreman of the state convict sawmill.

Jim Singleton, convict.

—, Byrd, convict.

—, Dutch, convict.

The wounded: J. W. Gibson, guard, shot through the body, the ball passing through the liver.

All of the convicts were sent up from New Orleans, and were working in the sawmill. At 9 o'clock Singleton stole Captain Block's revolver as the latter was reading a paper. He was joined by Dutch and Byrd. Gibson's attention was attracted to them, and he fired. Singleton returned the shot, shooting Gibson through the body. As Gibson fell, Byrd secured his revolver. The convicts started with Block to the river, and had placed him in a skiff, when they were fired upon by Trusty Deleth. Singleton then killed Block.

Pay Guard J. D. Ogden then joined Deleth, and in the fusillade of shots that followed, three convicts were killed.

Gibson was brought to Natchez on the mail steamer Betsy Ann and conveyed to the Natchez Charity hospital. He was shot through the liver, and the wound may prove fatal.

TO THE PUBLIC.

Having failed to get this issue in my printed platform, I now take this method of placing it before the voters of Brazos County: The old soldiers of the late unpleasant war are now being cared for at the home fixed by law for them, that they may be as pleasant as possible and have the care and attention of efficient nurses in their old age. Yet for the mothers and wives of these noble men, who worked and prayed while they fought, the law has made no provision. Shall Texas allow these old women to die in almshouses and depend on the cold charities of the world? Justice and righteousness answer no! If I am elected the chief aim of my life shall be to urge a bill that will provide for a place for these old women. They have not got long to stay, and I say give them a pleasant place to die if we have to amend the constitution to do it.

Mr. T. T. McCasland, formerly of Bryan, but for the past two years a resident of Houston, died at the home of his son-in-law, W. D. Garrett, at that place yesterday afternoon at six o'clock. He was a carpenter by trade, was held in high esteem by all who knew him, and loved by the people for his quiet and gentlemanly manners.

The funeral will take place from the H. & T. C. depot this afternoon at 1:38. Interment at the city cemetery.

AWFUL ATROCITIES.

"Hell Was Within Human Beings and They Enacted Role of Demons."

Grodno, Russia, June 21.—The correspondent of the Associated Press, who left Bialystok because the censor would not allow him to send telegrams describing the horrors enacted there, and who came here, sends this out:

"We have failed to clear up whether a policeman or an anarchist threw the bomb. The real cause of this and similar tragedies, I think, is the position which the Jews take over the ignorant Jews. The Jews everywhere are now organizing societies for self defense, and as soon as they show the slightest resistance to prosecution they will be treated by the troops and ignorant populace as revolutionists, from whom a simple death is too good. Parliament must insist on the punishment of the guilty."

As proof of the charge that the massacre was prepared in advance the Jews claim that the keepers of the government wine shops received notice the day before the outbreak to remove the cases from the shops to safer places.

The tales of atrocities committed are innumerable, and while some of them may be exaggerated, enough has been established to make almost everything creditable.

The mob seemed to delight in torturing the victims. Strips of flesh were cut from their bodies, children were snatched from their mothers' arms, and taken by their legs and brains on the pavement before the eyes of their parents. An old Jew was beheaded, and the ghastly trophy was carried all day at the end of a cases the heads of the victims were beaten to a jelly with stones.

At the Bialystok railroad station, where the mob searched the trains for Jews, a rioter seized a five-year-old girl by the throat, and held her at arm's length until she died.

Little children seemed to take pleasure in pointing out the hiding places of the Jews. Mutilated corpses, swarming with flies were left lying about the streets, in some cases for days.

A badly injured Jewess, in the hospital, describing the scenes, said: "Hell was within human beings, and they enacted the role of demons."

Then the woman suddenly went into convulsions at the memory of the horrors she witnessed.

ON LETTER WRITING

SOME ADVICE TO SCHOOLGIRLS ON THE SUBJECT.

Don't Write a Letter When in a Hurry

—Girls Should Have Few Young Men Correspondents—Any Handwriting a Failure That Is Difficult to Read—Stilted High Flown Letters Out of Date—Letters Among the Most Indestructible of Earthly Possessions.

BY MARGARET E. SANGSTER.

I heard Louise declare the other day that she hated to write a letter, and that she put off the unwelcome task as long as she could. Nellie with whom she was talking agreed that writing letters was a bore, but added that for her part she dearly loved to receive them. Well, most of us do. When the postman comes in the morning, it is a pleasure to find that he has brought you a letter from the girl who visited you last summer, or your cousin at Yale, or your favorite uncle whose letters are a little old-fashioned, but who at Christmas, Easter, and birthdays, proves himself a generous friend.

One always feels satisfaction at being remembered by the absent. If one is away from home, the mails are eagerly watched for letters from father and mother, and the rest of the dear home group. It is wonderful how fast and how safe are the trains that carry the letters with the little red stamp affixed, to show that Uncle Sam is responsible for their rapid transit. Only a thin slip of paper and a little gum protect it from the world, but the letter with its story of home-life, its check from papa, its little love gift from mamma, goes flying from New York to South Dakota, or from Boston to San Francisco, or New Orleans to Narragansett Bay, passing from hand to hand, until it reaches its destination. Nothing so slight as a letter seems to me so strong and so entirely protected from risks and dangers.

I do not think girls would dislike to write letters if they observed two or three rules. One is not to write a letter in too great a hurry. If you are on tip toe to go down the street, with Jean, or have made an engagement to skate with your brother and his chum at four o'clock, you will hardly be able to write a creditable letter, if you give yourself only five minutes to do it in. A girl needs a sense of leisure and a spare half hour in which to write the letter that shall carry something of her real self to her distant friend, or her anxious mother, miles away. No compliment is conveyed by frantic haste. Decide what you can do and what you can omit and get a little clear space and unhurried time before you begin a letter. Next, always answer a letter as soon as you can after you have read it. It is then fresh in your mind, the questions it asks and the news it conveys are alike full of interest to you, and you can carry on your part of the written conversation without its being one-sided and indifferent.

"I have a letter from Ruth," complained Ruth's sister, Rose, "and she has not told me a single thing I wanted to know, nor given me the address of her music teacher, nor so much as enquired how grandmother is and grandmother will be sure to ask me to read her the letter."

In this case Ruth's letter was a disappointment. A good plan before one begins is to glance again at the letter received and note the particular points that should not be overlooked in the reply.

A third suggestion concerns one's correspondents. A school girl ought not to engage in letter writing about which her parents and friends are in the dark. For instance, Adeline confided me the other day about the propriety of corresponding with a boy whom she casually met at her Cousin D's, while spending a day there, last summer. "He seemed a very nice boy," she said, "and I liked him very much. Now he is at the university and has written to me and wishes me to write to him. What shall I do?"

The thing for Adeline or any other girl to do in this instance is to show her boy friend's letter to her mother or teacher, and be guided by the advice given her. My own would be simply to answer such a letter very politely, but to explain that I was too busy to engage in a correspondence. A girl's letters to boys should be limited to members of her own family, to the cousinhood, and perhaps to somebody whom she has known all her life. When you meet a person accidentally and only for a short time, you do not know him well enough to write to him or receive his letters.

A fourth bit of counsel concerns itself with the dress of a letter. I do hope you girls write a legible hand. Whatever else handwriting may be, it is a failure if it is difficult to read. Such things as correct spelling and punctuation are very important. Misspelled words are as unsightly as ink spots, and dashes do not take the place of commas and periods. Write plainly, spell correctly. A good quality of note paper and black ink are indispensable in the correspondence of a young lady. Every letter should have at the top the full postoffice address of the writer and the date of the writing. Many people date their letters at the end, a fashion that has little to commend it, and which should be changed as soon as possible by us all for the more intelligent manner of dating what we write at the top of the first page. Do not write in a haphazard way all over your paper, so that it is as bad as solving a puzzle to find out where the next page begins. Sign your letter with your full name, no matter to whom you are writing.

Never write a letter to anyone which would give you uneasiness or disturbance should it fall into the wrong hand. Write as you talk, the more naturally the better. Stilted, high-flown letters are not welcome anywhere. In old times people began a letter by saying, "I take my pen in hand to write you a few lines, hoping that they will find you in good health, as I am now."

Sometimes they were even more formal than this. When I was fourteen I received a letter which began in this way: "Respected Miss." Nobody would think of starting a letter in that fashion to-day, and taking one's pen in hand and the allusion to a few lines has quite gone out. Write naturally as if your friend were in the room with you, and you were cozily chatting with her. It is proper to address a stranger as "My dear Mrs. C." and not as "Dear Mrs. C." The personal pronoun adds a touch of ceremony. "Dearest" is to be reserved for those to whom it applies, mother or sister, or the chum who is your very confidential friend, and almost your other self.

If you are obliged to write a business letter, address the firm or the person by name, following it on an order line with Dear Sirs, or "Dear Sir," or "Madam."

First, last and all the time, regard a letter as a thing with which pains should be taken. Long years hence the letter a girl writes may come back to her out of the past for, strangely enough, letters are among the most indestructible of earthly possessions.

NEGRO OYSTER TONGSMEN

Hardy Colored Men Who Rake Up the Succulent Bivalves for Market.

Of all the men who derive a livelihood from the waters of the Chesapeake bay and its tributaries there is no harder specimen than the colored tongsmen. From the first day of the oyster season until its close in the late spring he grapples in the mud with his tongs and brings up the succulent bivalves and drops them in the yawning hold of his skipjack or bugeye, as the craft may be.

The tongsmen are early risers in the oyster months. Long before the sun peeps over the cold gray waters of the bay he is out on the oyster beds working the slippery tongs, while his clothing and boots are frozen on him. The chilling wind cuts his cheeks and the floating ice crunches against the sides of his craft, but he only stamps and sings a peculiar chantlike hymn and works swifter than ever. When the big bay packets glide by, with their anchors and rails coated with ice, the tongsmen stops long enough from his labors to wave his hat at the passengers peering through the windows of the well-heated saloon. They take a long look at his bare hands and the ice glistening on his coat and boots and shiver.

"He'll freeze to death out in an open boat such weather as this," is the comment. But the colored tongsmen does not freeze. Long winters on the bay since he was tall enough to handle the tongs have made him almost immune to the cold.

"Cold?" he echoes when you question him. "Oh, no; Ah isn't cold. Why, dis heah am spring weddah longside of some Ah'b tongedin. Why, Ah'b tonged oystahs out heah in de bay when dey froze togeded soon es you lifted dem from de watah. Oh, no; dis ain't cold."

And the hardy tongsmen laughs when you point at the ice on his person. It is in the oyster season that we hear so much about "shanghaing" on the Chesapeake bay. This is an unlawful system of luring men from northern cities down to Baltimore to work on the dredgeboats. Once aboard these boats, the victims are at the mercy of the brutal captains, who force them to work the dredges until they are too weak, from the lack of proper food, to stand up, and then they are dumped on some barren shore or island, penniless and often frostbitten.

But the colored tongsmen experiences none of these hardships. He is his own master. He owns his skipjack or bugeye, and when the hold is filled with the fruits of his tongings he sails up to the "buy boat" or to one of the oyster wharves and exchanges the cargo of bivalves for cash. Then he goes ashore and buys his bacon and a bag of flour and returns to his little craft and cooks his meals on the tiny stove on deck. Supper over, he retires to his little cabin and sleeps until the first streak of gray appears on the eastern skies, and then he hoists sail and glides out to the oyster beds to begin another day's tonging.

Dangerous Place.

Judge Brewer is responsible for the following: "An amusing thing took place in Washington in connection with the supreme court last winter. There was a young man in the courtroom who was talking out loud, making a little confusion, and one of the old colored bailiffs went in and led him out and said: 'Young man, you want to come out and be still. That is the supreme court of the United States in there! If they get after you nobody in the world could help you out! Nobody could help you—except the Almighty—and the chances are He won't interfere!'

Man's Progress.

The number of things regarded as impossible is steadily diminishing.

A WIFE TO ORDER.

BY LOUIS D' LANGE.

(Copyright, 1906, by Daily Story Pub. Co.)

William Beattie was a lonesome man even as he had been a lonesome boy. All through his lonesome youth he had the most ardent feelings toward the girls with whom he came in contact, but something in his retiring nature forbade him to express these feelings or to get on even friendly terms with the objects of his admiration and desire.

In the meantime he was most faithful and efficient in business and prospered accordingly. At 30 he found himself comparatively a rich man, with boundless prospects before him. But he was not satisfied. Far from it, he was restless, morose—sayingly angry with his fate.

"What boots it that I have success, money, the respect and fear of men," he said to himself, "when I cannot have the love of woman—the one great thing I have wanted all my life?"

"You have not tried," replied his inner self, relentlessly.

"I cannot," he responded, savagely. "Nature left some void in my make-up, and try as I will, I am tongue-tied in the presence of women."

William Beattie, however, realized thoroughly the value of wealth, of hard cash. He knew its power over men and women, and in his business dealings he never made any mistakes in dealing with women any more than he did with men. It was only when he attempted to put himself into personal relations with women that he became tongue-tied and impotent.

Finally at 30 he made a great resolve.

"I can never win a woman's love—that is clear," he said to himself, "And a woman's love is the only thing in all the world that I want. I have achieved business means. I have all the money I will ever need—and plenty more coming. Nothing can stop that, I have never failed in a single enterprise to which I gave my mind and energy. Why not give this same mind and energy to secure what I want more than all else—a woman's love. To feel soft arms about my neck, to have languid eyes look into mine, to have a clinging, yielding form in my arms. To have children clamoring about my knees—for all this I would work harder, sacrifice more, than I have ever done. In fact I would give all I have acquired and all I hope to acquire."

"Why don't you do something about it?" inquired his inner self, relentlessly.

"I am going to," he replied, sharply. "I am going to devote all my energy and brains hereafter to securing a woman to complete my life. Since I cannot win a woman, I will start out at the beginning and rear one for my own purposes. I will buy a baby girl and have her reared and educated for the express purpose of becoming my wife."

And with this determination he started out. He haunted orphan asylums and lying-in hospitals. He sought the poor districts, where children are, of necessity, a burden. It was long before he found what he wanted, but eventually he did find it.

It was in St. Anthony's orphan asylum—and the face of the little girl, a child of five or six—attracted and thrilled him. Her dark, passionate eyes, her olive skin, her jet-black hair, her lithe young figure—all gave promise of glorious womanhood.

Inquiry developed that she was the daughter of a poor Italian girl of marvelous beauty, who had been brought to the lying-in hospital across the way by a big-hearted stranger, with plenty of money, and an air which bespoke blue blood. He had paid all her expenses liberally in advance, and then had faded away and was heard of no more.

After her recovery, the young mother, being unable to take care of the child, had placed it in the orphan asylum across the way. Beattie eagerly sought the mother. Though worn by years of coarsening toil, and still more coarsening associations, she still retained a remnant of a passionate type of beauty which put Beattie's nerves on edge and made his pulses bound. Not at all intellectual was Anita Maijoli, not educated or refined or intellectual, but she possessed all the splendid Latin possibilities of love—and showed it in every motion.

"If she were 16 instead of 30, and fresh instead of being a worn-out

DEAR LITTLE PERCY—HE GETS

A BOX OF CANDY AND

SCHOOLGIRL'S DRESS

SHOULD NOT THINK TOO MUCH ABOUT THIS VEXATIOUS MATTER.

Most Schoolgirls Too Young and Too Pretty to Require Much Ornament in Their Dress—Don't Worry About Your Figure If Your Dress Is Comfortable—Health Is the Great Beautifier.

BY MARGARET E. SANGSTER.

"Jessie has reached the age when she fusses and fidgets about her dress, looks at herself in the glass, worries because her cloak or her hat or her jacket or something else, is last year's style, and altogether behaves like a vain and silly girl," exclaimed Jessie's aunt Marion, who had no patience with such frivolous conduct.

"If Jessie had been the proper combination. The girl gave promise of all her mother's Latin beauty—and it was fair to assume she inherited some of the good blood of the father.

A bargain was quickly struck, and for a comparatively small sum—but one which exceeded the mother's wild dream of avarice—little Anita became the ward of Beattie. At once he removed her from the asylum and placed her in most competent hands.

The finest schools, the most exclusive surroundings, the most expensive clothes—money without stint, music, art, travel, literature, bright companions, all were hers.

And ever was instilled into her ear that she was growing up to be the bride of the great and rich Mr. William Beattie. He made no mistake.

He saw her but seldom, and always at his best. He lavished nice things upon her. He surrounded her with clever people, who sung his praises and filled her with wonder that so rare a web of fate should have been spun by the gods for any girl.

Finally after school days were over and the trip abroad had been made, she was brought to him like a ripe peach for the eating. And never had he seen so tempting a sight. His cup of happiness was overflowing.

He had been very careful that Anita had met no other men. That had been the one relentless and uncompromising rule of her educational days. Now he proposed to clinch matters before any untoward incident could occur.

He had his little talk with her, and she acquiesced to his programme with a slight blush on her perfect olive cheek, but with no strong tumult in her breast.

She had known all about it for years. She was not at all opposed to the programme. In fact, she liked it immensely. But there was no passion in the equation—on her part.

First and foremost there was to be a great betrothal reception, at which Anita was to be presented to society as the future Mrs. William Beattie. The wedding was to follow almost immediately. Beattie proposed to take no chances.

But fate has strange and unaccountable freaks. There drifted into that betrothal reception one Richard Lombard, a young mining engineer, only two years out of college, and those two years spent in hard work in Mexico. A great, towering, splendid fellow was Lombard, with the birth and breeding of a gentleman, and a magnetic presence—possessed of that something which attracts women everywhere.

His two years of outdoor life had bronzed his skin and given him that touch of magnificent masculinity which nothing but the hand-to-hand conflict with nature can give.

The moment his blue eyes met the black orbs of Anita both knew that something was happening within them. There was opportunity for but few words, but the eyes spoke the only language worth listening to, and when late in the evening Lombard came and offered his arm "for a breath of fresh air on the veranda," she took it as a matter of course, her heart thumping so hard as to make her afraid it would be heard.

What happened on the veranda, or on the moon-lit lawn, nobody knows. Only this is known: On the following morning William Beattie found a note on his breakfast table. It read:

"Mr. Beattie: I thank you for all your kindness and your devotion, but I have a life to live as well as you. When you receive this I will be the wife of Richard Lombard and 500 miles away. I would rather be his wife for one day and live in a tent with him, than to be mistress of your mansion and your millions for a hundred years. Girls may be won, but not bought. Forgive and forget me, Anita."

"I beg your pardon," I answered.

"A girl does need one or two dainty frocks for evening wear and they should preferably be white. The simpler they are the more suitable they are to be. A great many tucks, puffs, ruffles and lace insertions are misplaced in a girl's dress while she is yet in her teens. There may be, of course, some unobtrusive decorations, but not very much is needed for she herself sets off her gown. I like to think, too, that a girl who is growing up takes a little time now and then to bestow attention on the laundress who has to wash and iron the dainty muslins that are so elaborate and so beautifully finished with lace edges and delicate embroideries.

"A girl who has once or twice done her own laundry work, washed and ironed a white muslin gown, or a duck skirt, will know by experience that it is far from easy work, and she will be somewhat more careful about frequently sending it to the tub, than her friend who has had no such personal knowledge of the labor involved."

No young girl has the slightest occasion to worry about her figure if only she has a dress that fits her comfortably, if she stands up straight throwing back her shoulders and holding up her head. The figure will take care of itself. Health is the great beautifier and sensible dress is for young people its best ally.

Fortunately for young girls, there is no question about the length of their skirts, for everyday wear frocks that reach the ankle, are comfortable and insure ease in walking, and immunity from contact with mud and dirt. For functions such as Jessie referred to in her naive question about receptions and Sunday evenings, a girl's best gown while she is in her teens may be instep length. Girls never wear trailing skirts in these days. An excellent adjunct to cleanliness, comfort and health is a whisk broom or a clothes-brush scrupulously used every time a dress is taken off. If we would carefully brush our clothes and shake them out of an open window before hanging them in closets or wardrobes, we should rid ourselves of the danger of germs that may have lurked in outside dust.

Girls should be grateful that their lot is cast in the twentieth century. An eighteenth century girl, or one born in the early nineteenth, wore a short-waisted frock with the skirt beginning under the arm-pits. It was of clinging stuff and swept the floor as she walked. Her shoes were thin slippers without heels held on by strings crossed over the instep and around the ankles. On her head she often wore a construction of muslin and wire that was half turban and half cap. Her sleeves were short and her dresses half low at the neck, as a rule. Do you not think that you are much better dressed than she was, both for health and beauty?

ADVICE ABOUT THE TEETH

Select the Brush with Care, Consult a Dentist Whenever Certain Symptoms Appear.

So many people show little discrimination in the choice of tooth brushes. It is equally wrong to have them too soft or too hard. This ought to be ascertainable by the touch, and they should not be used for any length of time, but at once discarded. Cheap brushes with which the market is now flooded are an abomination, for the hairs are sure to come out and lodge between the teeth, causing much discomfort, and, moreover, the bristles are often secured in such a way with wire that it becomes dislodged, and pricks the gums.

Jessie had listened to both speakers with an air of serious attention.

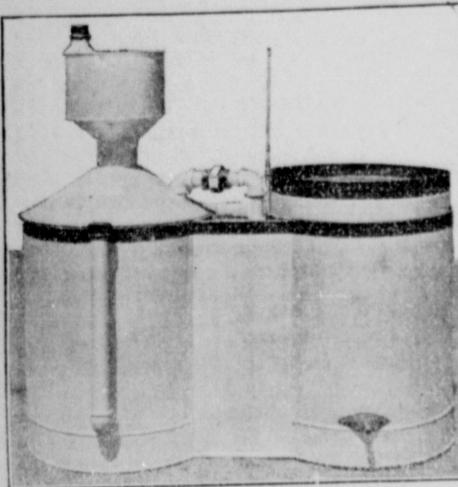

"I love pretty things," said she, "and I hate ugly ones. Why shall sister Louise, who is a young lady, wear a corset that gives her a good figure while I who have no figure at all am obliged to wear a corded waist and button my skirts to it?"

By this time I was so stirred up that I was compelled to intr

BRYAN, TEXAS, JUNE 22.

The republican state convention has been called to meet in El Paso August 1 to nominate a state ticket.

Senator Money of Mississippi declared in congress the opinion that if all four of the territories had been assuredly republican they would have been admitted to the Union as four states instead of two, and eight new senators would have been sent to Washington. "The action now being taken," he said, "is a blow to equal representation of the southern states."

Mr. Chas. K. Jackson, the globe trotter in the service of the Hearst newspaper syndicate, was in the city Tuesday. He was here reporting for the New York Journal. Mr. Jackson said they had a big badger fight in Bryan Monday night, and he believes he is the best badger fighter that ever left New York. Mr. Jackson is a young man, but has had lots of wonderful experience, being with the Japanese army during the Japanese-Russian war; he was also in Frisco when that city was destroyed; but Mr. Jackson thinks of all the experiences, the badger fight beats them all.—Hearst Democrat.

"Now won't you let me call you darling and let me feel the loving tendrils of your sweet rosy lips twining around mine while the twinkling stars of twilight look on and wink approval?" Such was the closing of a letter read in a breach of promise case in a Texas court, and the jurors twisted uneasily in their seats, while the judge stooped down behind the bar of justice and took a drink to steady his nerves.—Ex.

RACES! RACES! RACES!

State Fair Puts Up Money for the Biggest Race Meeting Ever Held in the South.

Dallas, Texas, June 21.—The State Fair management is determined that those who visit the races this fall, October 13 to October 28, shall be entertained with the real thing. The stakes or purses to be contested for aggregate more than $40,000. The program calls for thirteen days of racing. Each day there will be from five to seven running races and from two to three harness events. In order to pull off all these events during the afternoon there will be no time for waits between races. The excitement will be continuous. Besides the money offered by the State Fair Association the Texas Thoroughbred Horse Breeders' Association and the Texas Harness Horse Breeders' Association are each offering attractive stakes for Texas raised horses of their respective classes. The State Fair is offering five stakes of $1,200 each, open to the harness horses of the world. In the running department there are four stakes guaranteed to be not less than $1,000 each. In addition to these there are on the program sixty-one running purses, not less than $300 each. Entries to all running stake races will be closed August 1, 1906. The indications now are that there will be a larger number of high-class horses on the grounds than there were last year, as the amount of money offered is attracting the attention of horsemen all over the United States and Canada. Joseph Murphy will again judge the races and Arthur McKnight will start the horses. The grandstand is being overhauled and enlarged and a section of seats reserved exclusively for ladies and their escorts, and the paddock is being made one hundred feet longer than it was last year.

ANTIS SUSTAINED—COUNTY STILL DRY

A telephone message this morning at 10:30 o'clock announced that the charge of District Judge Boone to the jury trying the prohibition case at Anderson, had the effect of securing a verdict without the necessity of the jury leaving the box. The alleged irregularity in the Bedias box by the antis was sustained by the court after the box had been opened and the ballots examined.

As we understand the matter another election will have to be held. Judge Buffington, representing the pros, gave notice of appeal.—Navasota Examiner.
